STRESSES CONTRACTS

Editor, The Era: With your permission, I would like, through the columns of your paper, to answer the charges that are being made by the Hon. Mr. Rowe and some of his followers against the Hepburn administration.

If there is one thing the people have a right to expect, in politics, it is truthfulness. If a leader of a party for political reasons wilfully misrepresents, he forfeits any claim he may have had for support from the people. Mr. Rowe and some of his followers are charging that the present government has not fulfilled the promises made in 1934 and that we have levied 12 new taxes on the people. I propose to show

TOWN ACCOUNTS PAID

Accounts paid at a town council meeting Monday evening included Metropolitan Transport, $1.39; Bell Telephone Co., $20.64; Dr. J. H. Wesley, $4; Dunn's Garage, $39.90; Moloney Electric Co., transformer, $204.60; James Sloss, $3.60; E. Owens, $2.10; H. Crittenden, $2.10; H. Boyd, $2.10; N. Lundy, $2.10; E. Blair, $2.10; J. Stickland, $2.10; D. Crowder, $3.15; pay sheet 14, $29.60; W. W. Osborne, $3.60.

Bell Telephone Manager
Explains Changes
Now Being Made

OUTDOOR WORK DONE

Progress in making the change from a magneto system to a manual common battery system is reported by S. R. Stevens, local manager of the Bell Telephone Co.

"Citizens of Newmarket will be pleased to hear that work being done by the Bell Telephone Company preparatory to the conversion to the new telephone system, is well under way," Mr. Stevens said this week.

"The reconditioning of pole lines and other outside plant in the town has been completed and considerable progress has been made in reconditioning equipment on subscribers' premises. It has been necessary to make minor adjustments and changes at a number of houses in order to ensure uninterrupted service after the cutover and to assure a high grade of voice transmission.

"Slight alterations are also being made to the present telephone sets so that they may be used temporarily after the new switchboard has been installed. Subscribers whose sets have been altered will have noticed that their own bell does not ring when they are signalling the operator. This should not be regarded as a sign of defective bell as the changes which have been made in the set itself account for it.

"The temporary use of the present sets after the conversion will enable the company to give uninterrupted service at the time of the change to the new system. After the change, all instruments will be replaced by those without cranks. The replacement of the present instruments will be completed within a few weeks after the conversion early next year."

DISCOVER WHY IRON IN WATER

Although the water at the new well is pure, it is acidic and when it has gone through the mains it has picked up iron, a provincial health department chemist discovered last week. Dr. J. H. Wesley, M.O.H., reported to the town council on Monday evening.

Dr. Wesley said that the water would be treated to overcome this condition.

"The town water question has not improved any during the last few weeks," Dr. Wesley stated this week. "While the quantity of water furnished by the new Srigley St. well is quite sufficient for the needs of the town, the staining of basins and linens alike continues to get worse instead of better."

"The department of health sent a chemist to town and after making a complete examination of the water as it came from the well, as it came from the big filter, and as it passes through the mains, he reported that the water, even after filtered and having practically all the iron taken out of it, acts as a corrosive in the mains and causes the iron deposit in the water from the action of the water on the pipes and mains.

"That being the case there is the remedy of injecting sodium silicate at the filtration plant, which would mean the expense of the equipment and the annual expense for operation and material. The town council is now facing the question whether it would not be better to abandon the well and all its attendant expense rather than spend more money for a questionable supply of water."

A petition for a sewer on Niagara St. from Ontario to Simcoe was presented to the council by Dr. Wesley as health officer and was referred to N. L. Mathews, K.C., town solicitor.

Cranbrook Courier Awarded
Cup At Annual Convention In N. S.

MEET AT HALIFAX

The Charles Clark cup, emblematic of the best weekly newspaper in Canada of between 1,000 and 2,000 circulation, held by The Era for the last two years, was awarded to the Cranbrook, B.C., Courier, at the annual meeting of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association at Halifax, Nova Scotia, last week.

Cranbrook is a town of a little over 3,000 people 350 miles east of Vancouver and 100 miles west of the Crow's Nest Pass. It is the centre of a rich farming, mining and lumbering district, and a railway point with 11 hotels. The Courier was established in 1919. A few years ago a daily was started in the same town, but

LOUIS AND FARR FIGHT TO BE PART OF BIG NIGHT

It's a lot of work for members of the Lions club, but it's going to be a lot of fun for you.

It's the carnival (a word thus defined by Webster: "any merry-making, feasting or masquerading, especially when overstepping the bounds of decorum; a time of riotous excess") which takes place next Thursday, a week from tonight.

The Louis and Farr fight, it is said, has been arranged for the occasion and will be broadcast from the grounds, at the King George school.

The two local bands will parade the town before the event.

In addition to the men-operated booths, which include several new departures, the ladies will take care of a booth for the sale of home-made cakes, pies, cookies.

Tables will be provided and an extremely gifted lady has been secured to read tea-cups.

In order to convince you that lots of work is being done to assure a real evening the following list of laborers is given:

ceased publication after two or three years.

The Era is the only weekly to win the Clark cup two successive years since it was donated in 1925 by Charles Clark after his newspaper, the High River Times, had won the previous trophy three successive years.

The Barrie Examiner won the Mason trophy for the best weekly of over 2,000 circulation. The Examiner has won this trophy on several previous occasions, although not since 1934 until this year.

Council Learns

Tax collections so far this year amount to almost $66,000, compared to an estimate of $97,000 for the full year, N. L. Mathews, K.C., town treasurer, reported to the town council on Monday evening.

Tax penalties are $2,640, tax arrears, $19,476, so far this year. Dog tax collections were estimated at $200 and are already $433. Fees, rents and fines were estimated at $500, and are already $572. Licenses were estimated to bring in $200, and are already $622.

Electric light revenue for the year was estimated at $41,000, and amounts to $28,000. Water rates were estimated at $11,000, and amount to $7,600.

WORK WELL ADVANCED

"Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything," complained Mark Twain. That statement could not be made today, for right here in King township, in the province of Ontario, it is proposed to do something about drought conditions. More than that, work has been under way since the beginning of this year.

What has been done so far and what it is hoped to accomplish were explained to The Era on Monday by Prof. Wm. J. K. Harkness, of the University of Toronto, through the good offices of the sponsor of the scheme, Aubrey Davis, of Newmarket.

The scheme is for the conservation of all natural resources, which include, according to Prof. Harkness, wood, water, birds, animals and fish.

In the first place Prof. Harkness emphasized that it is "our belief that you can't maintain natural life unless you have water, and you can't have water without woods."

"We want to know how much of King township is under bush," Prof. Harkness said. "If it is five per cent, which is only an estimate, it is at least six times too small."

"Today I was going along the streams determining the effect of wood lots on the water. If the temperature is high, there is not going to be water very long. If cool, there will be water. I have

Men Stood Ankle Deep In Mud To Work For Landing Church

Editor, The Era: In a recent issue of your worthy newspaper appeared an interesting article dealing with the re-opening of the Holland Landing United church on Aug. 22.

One thing worthy of notice was omitted. That was the splendid work done by those who so willingly gave their labor and skill to make this undertaking possible, as well as a success. To these willing workers the building committee owe their deepest appreciation and most sincere thanks.

To the truck owners who travelled 7½ miles to haul 60 cubic yards of gravel, as well as to those who loaded and piled the gravel on the site.

To the farmers who brought their teams day after day.

To those men who worked in water and mud, ankle deep, while excavating for the basement.

To the skilled workers who gave their best, as well as the unskilled, who assisted through the period of reconstruction.

Yours truly,

Building Committee.

NO MORE SPEED TRAPS

Speed traps in York county are to be abolished Warden W. E. MacDonald announced last week.

All this work was given freely by those who had passed through six years of depression, and had felt the effect of adverse conditions keenly.

Surely in a world of self-interest, strife and bloodshed, it is worthy of note that there are still some, who in a little village just off the highway, are willing to give their best to help in such a worthy cause as the reconstruction of a church building.

We appreciate the help the ladies of the village have given all through. Whenever they could give a helping hand, they were there to do all they could.

Our sincere thanks also go to those who have been so generous, and helped financially to complete the work satisfactorily.

Yours truly,

H. W. Tomes, Secretary,

Building Committee.

Provide Power For North Enders, Buy Transformer

Councillor Osborne Announces Decision To Provide Electricity

The town will continue to supply electric power to the north end East Gwillimbury suburb, Councillor W. W. Osborne, chairman of the town's water and light committee, told the council on Monday evening.

"We are putting a new 15-kilowatt transformer up by the cemetery and moving the 10-kilowatt transformer up beyond the cemetery," Mr. Osborne said. "You are going to provide them with power?" Reeve Dr. L. W. Dales asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Osborne.

"Fine," said Dr. Dales.

Mr. Osborne explained that he had not yet received the information from the Ontario Hydro-Electric which he wanted about the cost of town power, and that the town was not undertaking to supply sufficient current for stoves, but for lighting only. The new transformer will cost about $300 Mr. Osborne said.

More than a thousand people attended the field day sponsored by the Uxbridge girls' softball club held at Uxbridge last week.

TRINITY PASTOR DIES SUDDENLY

Ill less than two weeks, following an appendix operation, Rev. Joseph Henry Wells, pastor of Trinity United church since July, 1936, died early yesterday.

Mr. Wells had made many friends here during his short pastorate, and his illness and death have been the cause of genuine sorrow among people of all denominations in the town.

Mr. Wells was born at Palmerston, the son of Jane Prescott and John Wells, and was brought up there and at Mount Forest. He graduated in arts and theology at Victoria College, University of Toronto, in 1908, and entered upon a fruitful ministry in the Methodist church and subsequently the United Church.

His first pastorate was at Lion's Head for two years. He spent four-year pastorates at Curran Crossing, Watford, Paris, Welland, seven years at Inlington, five years at Parry Sound, and then came to Newmarket.

There survive his wife and three children: two daughters, Marjorie, Toronto, and Marion, Toronto; and one son, Harley, Toronto. Mr. Wells was one of a family of 13, of whom nine survive.

Funeral services take place on Friday afternoon. There will be a private service at the residence, 145 Main St., at 1 p.m., and a public service at Trinity United church at 1:30 p.m. Interment will be at Burford.

Pickering Student Finds Ghost City In Mountains

By DON KYLE

Don Kyle is a Pickering student, making a hobo motor trip to Vancouver.

The goal achieved at last! It's like a dream come true to camp here on the shores of the great sparkling Pacific. After following in the footsteps of the early intrepid explorers, first Marquette and Joliet, La Verendrye and his sons, Fraser, Thompson, after whom two great rivers have been named, Mackenzie, whose feat we duplicated, using ketchup, however, instead of blood to emblazon our names for posterity on the jagged rocks of the North Shore, and lastly Cook and Vancouver, the seamen who visited here 200 years ago, we felt like discoverers ourselves.

LANDS BIGGEST FISH

James Bond returned on Tuesday morning after spending an enjoyable week's holiday at the home of his son in New Liskeard from where he visited Elk Lake, Metchewan, Gowganda and Kirkland Lake. On Saturday last he was a member of a party of six on a fishing trip up the Mattawapika river and was successful in landing the biggest pickerel of the day.

From the moment we sighted the "shining mountains," as the Indians of the plains called them, adventure and romance was in the air. To easterners who have never seen mountains it is an awe-inspiring and somewhat terrifying sight.

Though you watch continuously for the first glimpse of the peaks, discoverers ourselves.

Defeat

Though held scoreless in five out of the seven innings played here against the Reds on Thursday evening, Richmond Hill batters were able to bunch their hits in the first and last innings, to earn the 7-4 victory that gave them the right to meet Allandale.

Fumbles, due to the condition of the ball and the wet grass, paved the way for the four-run spurge staged by Richmond Hill in the initial frame. White, Brown, Bennett and Ecklin tallied for the visitors. Alex Webster, Red hurler, seemed to be the only man who could hang on to the ball and he won laurels on all three put-outs in this inning and his pitching was the feature of the game.

Giles walked to first base and slithered round to home to ring up the first run for the Redmen. He walked again in the third and stole home on an overthrow to cut down the Richmond Hill lead to 4-2.

In the fourth and fifth there was no further scoring, though the Reds left four stranded on bases. In the sixth Glibney laced out a homer that cut down the

Talagoos' Goal

The Talagoos fattened their scoring average at Sutton's expense last Friday night while Brooklin took a firm hold on second place by out-scoring the fast Brampton squad by 6-2 in Brooklin.

Sutton is showing improvement, but so are the Talagoos. Tunney, in goal, looks better every time out. James and Graham, who get their relief from Barber and Carr do the defence chores and make life miserable for incoming forwards.

Collings at centre, with Hunter, Brewer and Bennett, show lots of classy stick-handling and a nice scoring punch with 20 goals in four games. Maberley at centre, with O. Lunau, Stong and Barber or Carter, are going great guns and have collected 24 goals, in the four games. The defence boys have seven goals.

In the Friday game, Plynick gave Sutton their first goal in 30 seconds. This was followed by goals by Stong in six minutes, two by Maberley in six and two minutes and Hunter in one minute. The score at the end of the first period was Talagoos 4; Sutton 1.

In the second period Hunter got two more, while James, Maberley and Stong had one each, making a period score of 4 to 0 for Talagoos.

each, gave a 5 to 2 score for this period, and a total score of 17-3 for the game.

Barber, James and Bennett with a goal each, had all the scoring luck in the fourth period. There were ten penalties, five to each team, in this game; most of them minor or accidental offenses.

Mr. White of Richmond Hill handled the game to the satisfaction of both teams.

The Talagoos' goal-getters show the following scoring order: Maberley, 17; Hunter, 7; Bennett, 6; Brewer, 4; Barber, 4; Collings, 3; Lunau, 3; Carter, 2; Stong, 2; James, 2; Graham, 1.

POLITICS, POLITICS

An election is coming, and coming this fall, Premier Hepburn announced last week at his annual birthday party. Each of us, in the next few months, will be called upon many times, by friends and casual acquaintances, to express an opinion on the two very interesting, but very different, questions: Who will win? Who ought to win? We prefer to express our own answers to these questions in the most guarded language of a sports-writer predicting the outcome of a game, a fight or a yacht race. However, we will not hesitate to express outright opinions on the various issues and ought-to-be issues. For instance, we will be critical of the present government's administration of the liquor laws, and we will be critical of any other government which raises one hand in horror at the death toll on Ontario's highways and with the other does everything possible to promote the sale of alcoholic beverages. As yet, Mr. Rowe hasn't made any very helpful pronouncement on this question, and Mr. Hepburn isn't likely to announce any change in policy.

Hepburn Promises

Mr. Hepburn said that he would "swing to the left" when he came into power, and by that he was understood to mean that he would try to give the breaks to the small man, the working-man and the unemployed man. He created the impression, if he did not say, that his government would make an end of unemployment. He later asked the Ontario people to vote for federal Liberal trade policies so that farmers might do better and so that the unemployed might go to work. Mr. Hepburn criticized the Herby government for extravagance, and said that he would cut down or keep down the public debt. When a candidate for public office says, "I will do so-and-so," he must be understood to mean, "I will do my best to do so-and-so." To what extent has Mr. Hepburn's best enabled him to keep his pledges?

Fairly Well Kept

He swung to "the left," as promised, in many things, in the collection of succession duties, in the imposition of income taxes (something for which, we believe, he deserves a great deal of credit), in getting better terms from the Quebec power companies (although the fairness of Ontario's action may be open to question) and in passing the savings along to power users. He deserves credit for part of the province's tremendously increased revenues, for balancing the budget for the last fiscal year, and for helping property-owners to the extent of one mill.

To the Right

Mr. Hepburn may have been perfectly right in his action in the C.I.O. dispute, but he certainly wasn't swinging to the left. In fact, he won the support of his most bitter opponents, the support of those who believe that money may struggle for all the return it can get but that labor should not do likewise, the support of those who were most critical of the income tax and the power contracts cancellation. Mr. Hepburn regards this labor question as one of the live issues of the approaching election, but we can't see how it can help him when the opposition leader has enunciated a perfectly reasonable and highly liberal policy on the same question. Summarized, Mr. Rowe's policy is: no law-breaking, labor's right to organize, the right of the individual to work without becoming a union member, no undue display of force by the government. Many may prefer Mr. Hepburn's slightly different policy, but we think that Mr. Rowe's policy statement is more liberal and democratic.

School Question

On the school question it is being said that Mr. Hepburn "sold out" the public schools, and will do so again, if returned to power. We believe that that is unfair criticism, that Mr. Hepburn made an honest and courageous effort to do justice to a minority group. Mr. Rowe and his colleagues did not increase their stature in our eyes by stirring up the religious strife which forced the repeal of the school legislation. Christian public policy would see that a minority group got more than its share, rather than less than its share, of the public revenues. One public school system, supported by all, is the ideal to which we would look, and it could eventually be achieved through generosity and fairness, but never will be through squeezing.

Take Your Choice

There they are. We do not believe that either Mr. Hepburn or Mr. Rowe, on their records and utterances, can be made into great men as yet, although time and experience may make them so. They have gifts of leadership, but no great qualifications of wisdom or education. Let's give them a fair hearing throughout the election campaign, and then vote for the leader and the local candidate who best represent our viewpoint and most command our respect.

MAIN STREET

The special council meeting of two weeks ago, which went into the question of the frontage position of a fine new Main St. building, achieved something. It brought public attention to the question of the future of Main St. It resulted in a unanimous resolution from the council providing for a by-law to set building lines for Main St., a by-law which would prevent owners from building on their own property. In their own interests. Main St. property-owners have thousands and thousands of dollars tied up in real estate, or, to put it in another way, in the continued goodwill of the shopping public. If the street gets hopelessly behind the times, another shopping section will spring up. It has happened in most towns and cities. In the process the whole town loses business to other towns with better shopping facilities.

New Lines To Be Set

For two years The Era has been urging the town council to set building lines for Main St. Now that it is to be done, we believe that the merchants and Main St. property-owners themselves should study the question (oh, for a business men's association) and make suggestions to the town council in order to protect the future value of their own properties and the future of Newmarket as a shopping centre. On at least one side of the street a new frontage line should be set, sufficiently back to assure Newmarket a broad business street in 25 or 50 years time. The line should be set from Water St. to Huron St., because this town is growing. No valuable new front, likely to stand 50 or 75 years, should be built in front of these lines.

Just A Suggestion

Now we have a suggestion to make. We make it hesitantly, but seriously, in the belief that it may have some merit and meet with some favor. Let us remember that our Main St. should be our show-window, an impressive advertisement to the travelling public of our alertness and progressiveness, a thoroughfare that will make people feel that here is a town in which they would like to live. The late Hon. E. J. Davis made a bequest of $10,000, on condition that the town or the townspeople add another $10,000, the whole to be used to provide a memorial to the sacrifice made by Newmarket men and boys overseas. At the time of Mr. Davis's death, the organized war veterans of the town had already erected a formal "peace memorial," but there is no reason why there should not be another memorial of a different kind.

Double Memorial

Why should that memorial not be a better Main St., and be not only a memorial to the overseas services and sacrifices, but also to the late Mr. Davis, who was much loved by the citizens of this town and whose ability has been a major factor in the growth of the town since the beginning of the century? Our suggestion would be that the town council offer, to the executors, to contribute $10,000 to a fund for the widening and improving of Main St., and that the name of the street be changed to Davis St. or Memorial St. The town would have to raise its share of the fund by debenture. The fund would be available to widen the pavement, to provide underground wiring and cluster lighting, and perhaps later on, if not otherwise exhausted, in case of real hardship to compensate owners who had to move buildings back. Incidentally, we believe that there are many Main St. property-owners at the present time who would be glad to deed to the town property in front of their buildings, and the town should begin even now to get as many of these deeds as possible. It should be remembered too that while a wide Main St. is a need of the entire town, Main St. property-owners will benefit most and may be fairly levied on for local improvement. We would like to see a 25-year-plan for Main St., with all buildings on the west side of the street back considerably from the present frontage line at the end of that time. Buildings on the east side should not be in front of the present line from Brunton's to the McCauley block.

WHAT YOU DO

Commenting on a report on the subject of vocations made by a United States university professor, the Financial Times of Montreal, of which David Burnside, once a Newmarket store clerk, is general manager, advises its readers to study this "compilation of life-time returns in connection with the careers they may be mapping out for their children." That is good advice, although if everybody took it and everybody went into the highly paid vocations (assuming that everybody had the money to pay for the necessary training), these professions would become the least well paid. Farming, now at the bottom of this list, would go to the top.

For The Money You Earn

The report is on the life earnings of the average man in 18 different vocations. The table is interesting and is given here, although there does not seem to be much that any one of us can do to change it. We would not advise you to go into medicine or law rather than farming, nor into farming rather than into medicine or law. Probably the reason that farming is so popular, and therefore so low paid, is that young people wisely think of what they would like to do rather than of the return a particular profession may bring.

SPEED LIMITS

That the 50 and 30 miles an hour limits for country and town respectively have come to stay doesn't seem to be as yet definitely established. Criticism of the new speed limits is appearing from time to time, and may or may not be just the last feeble kicks of the halted, the maimed and the blinded pedestrians that the motoring public have been running down for years. Voicing criticism of the highway limit of 50 miles an hour as encouraging reckless driving, the Midland Free Press recently stated that it had welcomed the change but had already changed its opinion. The Amherstburg Echo says that 30 miles an hour is "too high in Amherstburg anyway because of narrow streets and poor vision at intersections." The Echo says further: "A motorist might be able to drive at 50 miles an hour with perfect safety in one town but would imperil his own life and that of others if he drove more than ten miles an hour in another town. Every municipality should be given the authority to establish its own speed limit if Ontario thoroughfares are to be made safer."

A Useful Law

It should not be overlooked, of course, that the law still prescribes a speed of 12 miles an hour at intersections where the view is obstructed. This law is flagrantly disregarded just as the 20 mile speed limit was disregarded. The law is perhaps extreme, but nevertheless provides a basis for prosecution of those who drive unreasonably fast, although not in excess of 30 miles an hour, past dangerous intersections.

The Common Round

By Isabel Inglis Colville

"The Influence Of Books"

I have heard people say that the movies influence people this way or that way—that even children may be definitely influenced for good or evil by them. To me, their influence seems fleeting, compared to that of books.

When I was a small child, I read "Pilgrim's Progress," read it and re-read it till I could repeat whole passages from memory. Reading it as I did, at the mature age of nine years, the allegorical truth missed me entirely—I took it literally.

I thought Christian really found a small wicket gate in some enchanted coventry and, after going through it, he experienced all the dangers and temptations as he travelled on to the Holy City.

I was a dreamy, imaginative child, had no brothers or sisters, and of course, it came about that I had a sort of inner life, where I lived and moved among the characters I learned to love in the book I read and re-read. But Christian, for some reason, particularly struck my fancy.

I didn't know what a wicket-gate was, but every little gate which we passed, which led into a long lane, I longed to open and see if any of Christian's experiences would fall to my lot.

There was a little gate on our property which led into a large pasture field. Behind a great clump of trees, I'd make our great English bull dog lie down. Then I'd go back, get my kitten, and we'd walk warily along the narrow pathway. Our cow, of which I was inordinately afraid, was Appolyn, and Prince, the dog, a great lion.

If the cow crossed our path, we'd fend it off with an open umbrella, and of course Prince's great body would waddle towards us whenever he heard my voice. Of course it was play, but I studied my guide book, as I called it, and surely something of its significance has stayed with me through the years.

Another book, I revelled in was Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." I wouldn't like to say how often I read and re-read the last chapter, which I think is one of the most marvellous pieces of writing in the English language, but no one could read it and not feel the beauty of selflessness—the inner peace which comes from giving one's self gladly to save another. There must be an echo of that, in one's soul, down the years.

I think the urge to write came from reading two books, Louisa Alcott's "Little Women" and "Jo's Boys". The desire was always deep-planted in my inner consciousness, but until I read of Joe's struggles to become a writer, I had always felt that an author sprang into being overnight. I had never considered the concentrated effort and singleness of purpose necessary for even a modest effort in the literary field.

I remember one woman telling me that she shed her whole philosophy of life on a passage in a book, which she picked up one day and opened at random. She had always been a timid person—afraid to do this or that for fear of offending someone, or of what people would say, but after she read this passage, "Fear is the original sin; almost all the evil in the world has its origin in the fact that someone is afraid of something," and to this she added from another book, these words, "Who is responsible for the sense of fear? Who so mistrusts the divine order of the universe as to doubt the ultimate intention of goodness in things which appear evil? It is I alone, who am the instigator of my own fear."

Of course, there are times when one wonders why some books are written.

A friend said to me, today, as we discussed some recent books, "I've read four stories lately, in every one the principal characters had either been divorced, or the book was the story of a situation which was leading to the divorce court. Do you think," she continued, "that there are no longer any happy marriages, and if so, are they not worth writing about?"

I know of a woman who wrote the editor of a magazine, expressing disapproval of a mystery story which his magazine was running. To me it was infinitely to be preferred to some of the stories of marital tangles which adorn the pages of many magazines.

But in the greater number of books there is a seed of truth hidden, which will sometime sprout just when you need fruit or flower from that particular tree of knowledge.

Each one of us, I am sure, has a little store of poetry and choice prose laid on memory's shelves, to be brought out when hands are too weak to hold books, or eyes too dim to read. To me, books are friends; they lead me, guide me, comfort and never fail me. Can we ask more of any friend?

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

As the re-opening of school and college draws near we receive reports of this one or that one preparing for high school or university. Up until the present, entrance to high school has left little choice as to courses. University, on the other hand, offers many avenues for which the new student must make decisions that will profoundly affect his or her career.

This year we are moving into more of that sort of thing in our high schools, where a division of interests is now made possible. All too little consideration has been given to the importance of guiding each person into the endeavors for which that individual is best suited.

Taylor Statten, director of vocational guidance at Pickering College, divides the basic human desires under five headings:

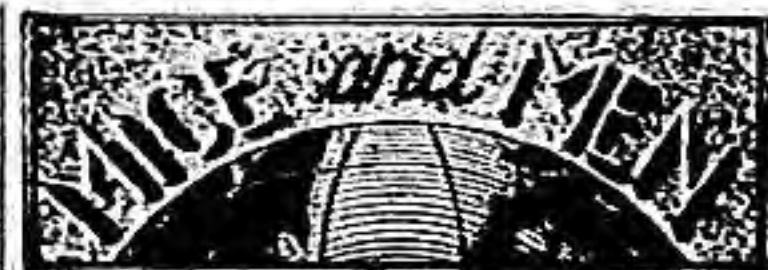

- Recognition.
- Experience.
- Affection.
- Power.
- Security.

Many of our young people, in looking forward upon life, are seized with the importance of satisfying one or two of these desires to the exclusion of the others. The great emphasis will likely be placed upon education that leads to a high-pay job. The desire for security is such a fundamental one and is continually intensified by the influence of our economic order.

Wealth has been idealized to so great an extent that after a period of financial depression our youngsters are impressed by preparing for the next depression. The fact that recent graduates in any course all have good positions is given great prominence as a guide for prospective students.

A young man or woman of 18 or 20 is still unsettled and immature. Decisions are often made hastily on some sudden enthusiasm. Here is the road to a good living. Let us grab it while we have the opportunity.

But the student's ability may not be suited to the type of work for which he is preparing. After struggling through difficult years, he at last finds himself with a diploma as recognition of certain academic training. But the new job may be such that he does not excel and earn his recognition in the eyes of his fellows. The experience of it does not interest

A Rare Bird Is Found At Kettleby

BY RUTH DINGMAN HEBB

"I don't believe I've ever been to Kettleby before," stated Hattie Nuthatch to her friends as they reached the village. "It's a very pretty spot."

"Why did we have to come so fast?" complained one of the younger members of the party. "I'm tired and what's more, I'm hungry."

"You can pick up something in these trees right here," his mother told him. "We're all going to stop and rest a minute before going on any farther."

"We mustn't waste too much time," said Pecker, the conductor of the little trip. "It's well on into the afternoon now and if we're going to accomplish anything there won't be time to do any more resting, because we have to get home early."

"Why do we have to be home so early?" inquired Johnny Chickadee. "I thought we'd be able to stay up a little later tonight for a change. I was sure we wouldn't get back in time to go to bed at the regular time."

"We must be home early because of the terrible amount of traffic in the air these evenings," explained Pecker. "In the early evenings before it gets dark there is such a crowd travelling just now. And moreover, they are all going south and we go home in a northerly direction and we'd be running right into them."

"It would be frightfully dangerous," added Chips.

"Dangers?" gasped young Chick Nuthatch. "Why would it be dangerous?"

"Because probably some of you young things would get lost in the rush and bustle and wouldn't know what birds you were with," was the reply. "You might start flying in the other direction. A lot of young birds are lost from their families every year during the migrations and they never see their parents again. We don't want that to happen to any of you children."

"Fortunately we don't migrate, so there's no excuse for any of us getting lost," added Chubby. "The only possible chance is that one of you would get mixed up with these huge flocks moving southward sometime when you're away from home like this. That's why we want to get home in good time, before the traffic gets heavy."

"Come on everyone," ordered Pecker suddenly. "I think we'll find the person we're looking for over this way."

"Who is the person we're looking for?" Cheery Chickadee asked her mother.

"We're looking for the Lincoln Sparrow that lives over here," explained Cora. "Pecker just found out about him the other day. He is very rarely seen in this part of the country. Once in a long while one is seen as it is migrating in the spring or fall. They are supposed to nest away up north. I remember how excited we got last year when we saw one at migration time in the fall. But this one lives at Kettleby all summer, strange to say, and we didn't even know about him."

At that moment Pecker stopped the party and asked politely of a pretty blacky green and white Tree Swallow if he could tell him just where the Lincoln Sparrow lived.

"Sorry pal," came the reply. "I'm a stranger here myself. The Swallows are gathering in flocks for migration now, you know. I come from over King City way."

"How annoying!" muttered Pecker. "Did you ever know it to fall?"

"I'll ask this Song Sparrow if he knows," said Johnny Chickadee helpfully. "That is, I will if I can keep my eye on him. He seems to be dashing about a lot and disappearing into the brush."

"Ho, ho, ho, that's a good one," laughed the little Sparrow when Johnny had finally reached him. "I'm not a Song Sparrow, I'm the chip you're looking for."

"My feet and feathers," exclaimed Johnny. "Is that right? You look just like a Song Sparrow to me," he added tactlessly.

"Tsk! Tsk!" said the Sparrow. "If you look at me carefully you will see that although we do look quite a bit alike, I have buff color on my breast and sides, which the Song Sparrow hasn't. It's true we both have spotted breasts. My back is a bit more greyish than the Song Sparrow's, though, and I am a little smaller. But you just remember that I have a buff-colored breast and you'll know me again."

By this time the others had come over to see what could be keeping Johnny and they were delighted to discover the object of their search. They proceeded to have a lively chat with him.

"Won't you sing for us," begged Hattie. "I've heard that you have one of the finest songs in the Sparrow family, a loud, clear gurgle, something like the House Wren's song."

"That's all true," said the Sparrow, "but I'm sorry but I hardly ever sing this late in the summer. It's against my principles." He closed his bill firmly.

The others coaxed him but with no luck. However, he answered their other questions and told them about building his nest on the ground like the Song Sparrow does and about being famous for his cleverness at hiding in the brush. Then with a grin he said that he must go and find his wife and family and proceeded to disappear, much to the disappointment of the chums.

"There's no use hunting for him," Pecker told them, "because you won't find him. Besides it's high time we started for home."

Two Irishmen came to a railroad crossing. The gates were down.

Stopping the car, they settled down until the train should pass, but both were soon asleep.

With thundering wheels the express dashed past, causing them to open their eyes.

"I say," said one, "wasn't that a well-lighted village we passed through?"

"Yes," yawned his companion, "an' did you notice that the first house was on fire?"

"I don't see Charlie half as much as I used to."

"You should have married him when you had the chance."

"I did."

He: "What do you mean by saying I have been deceiving you for years?"

She: "I just found out the government allows you $2,500 a year on your income tax for being married to me, and all you've allowed me is a miserable ten dollars a month!"

Man: "What's the idea of calling your dog Swindler?"

Friend: "Oh, just for fun. When I call him in the street, half the men almost jump out of their skins."

Pleasant Expectations

"Do you remember that couple we met on the steamer we took a liking to? I mean the couple we invited to visit us."

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our only son and brother, Leonard Railton, who was killed Aug. 22, 1934. August brings sad memories, Of a loved one gone to rest; He will always be remembered, By those who loved him best. Days of sadness still come o'er us, Tears in silence often flow; Memories keep him ever near us, Though it is three years ago. Ever remembered by Mother, Dad and Beth.

Yorke—In memory of a loving husband and father, Everett T. Yorke, who passed away August 22, 1936.

I have lost my soul's companion, A life linked with my own, And day by day I miss him more As I walk through life alone. Sadly missed by his loving Wife, and Son Claude.

Metherall—In loving memory of our dear daughter, Nellie, who died August 18, 1934. We miss her here so very much, Her presence oft seems near, But we all hope in Heaven to meet. Where no one says good-bye: Sadly missed by Mother and Dad and family.

Metherall—In loving memory of our dear Nellie, who died August 18, 1934. We know that Jesus took her, Into His mansion above, There to be free from all troubles. Safe in the arms of His love. Sadly missed by Grandma and Grandpa Rose.

Wilton—In loving memory of our dear Wife and Mother, Mary Ann Wilton, who fell asleep August 22, 1935. Time speeds on, two years have passed Since death its gloom, its shadows cast Within our home, where all seemed bright, And took from us a shining light. We miss that light, and ever will, Her vacant place there's none can fill. Down here we mourn, but not in vain, For up in Heaven we will meet again. Sadly missed by Husband, Son and Family.

Thrilling True Story MAKES STARTLING FILM
With Hollywood producers trying to outdo each other when making sensational movie stories, it is refreshing as well as interesting to note that a new 100 per cent talking version of "The Man They Could Not Hang" has recently been produced which, while containing every thrill desired, is yet a highly moral entertainment containing much for every church-goer to ponder over.

"This true story of a young lad, arrested and sentenced to death on purely circumstantial evidence, of his constant assertions of innocence, his fervent belief that Heaven would not allow an innocent man to perish, of the failure three times over of the gallows to act, and of the final confession of another, making a story many times as thrilling as the multitude of absurd concoctions sent out by small minded producers, and yet both entertaining and absolutely true.

Now on a world tour, the complete unit including (in person) W. Leonard Howe, formerly with Douglas Fairbanks, Sir J. Forbes Robertson and other stars, who will give a first hand knowledge story of the great case, introducing scenes of the crime and the survivors as they appear today and will play the Palace theatre, Newmarket for two nights only, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 25 and 26.

"If you are good, Richie, I'll give you this bright new penny." "Haven't you got a dirty old nickel?"

Mrs. Findlay MacKenzie of Morris, Man., spent a couple of days this week with Mr. and Mrs. Alex. MacKay on her way home from a trip to England and Scotland.

Mr. Bruce Prest is on a motor trip this week through eastern Canada to Murray Bay.

Miss Medora Travis and her niece, Miss Jane Travis, have returned from the hotel Sunset, at Goderich.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Mount returned on Tuesday evening from their wedding trip to Montreal and Ottawa. While in Ottawa, Mr. and Mrs. Mount were visiting Mr. Mount's uncle, Dr. H. T. Mount.

—Prof. W. G. McBride of the department of mining engineering of McGill University, Montreal, paid his sister, Mrs. R. H. Meek, who has been convalescent for some time, a brief visit on Monday.

Town Council Legislates For Quiet Election And Tidy Town

The town council delivered a blow to the politicians at its meeting on Monday evening. There is to be no more taking bills upon posts, according to a resolution passed.

"I notice bills tacked on all the posts in town," said Reeve Dr. L. W. Dales, introducing the resolution in question. "Aurora has a by-law preventing that."

The resolution sponsored by Dr. Dales and Councillor Arthur Evans, provided that bills might be posted on half a dozen signboards which the town would erect.

"Election time just coming on," jokingly commented Mayor Dr. S. J. Boyd. "How are we going to get by?"

"When are the property committee going to take down the July 31 rates posters?" added N. L. Mathews, K. C., clerk and solicitor.

"And the coronation posters are still up," added Dr. Dales.

"Fall In" Bugle Call Sounds For Kids With Wind And Ear

Personal attention will be given to those who apply on Friday evening next, Aug. 20, at the R.S.A. Hall at 7 p.m.

Those only who are willing to accept discipline and receive instructions will be considered.

The R.S.A. Bugle Band, which is taking another step in advance, is contemplating the organization of a juvenile unit and is looking for desirable recruits, and will consider application of youths from ten to 15 years of age.

Mr. Allen of New York state has organized one state and two national goat associations. The new American Goat Society has a registry of 2,000 purebred goats. It is not likely that goats will ever supplant cows, however, for though seven goats can live on the feed required for one cow, the seven goats would not give as much milk as a cow would.

Mr. Allen plans to experiment with butter, ice cream and cheese made from goat's milk. Goat's milk ice cream, he states, is the last word in delicacies, due to the extremely fine texture and smoothness of the cream.

Dr. D. H. Guy was of the same opinion. "Goat's milk has no special properties," he said. "It has the same amount of calories as cow's milk. Occasionally, a child may be sensitive to cow's milk and not to goat's milk; then goat's milk may be used."

DIES AFTER 3 YEARS ILLNESS

Confined to her bed since three years ago, when she suffered a stroke, but patient and uncomplaining all that time, Mrs. R. B. Smith, widow of the former hardware merchant, died a week ago today.

Margaret Jane Carter was born at Whitevale in Pickering township, the daughter of Jane and Thomas Carter 71 years ago. She was married in Toronto to R. B. Smith of Ravenshoe, who shortly afterward started in business in Newmarket.

Her interests and energies were concentrated in her home. She was a member of the Methodist and later of the United Church.

Two sons and four daughters survive: R. C. Smith, Max Smith; Miss Pearl Smith, at home; Ruby (Mrs. J. S. Thorncliffe), Toronto; Miss Irene Smith, Toronto; Miss Connie Smith, at home.

Two of her former pastors, Rev. A. B. Marshall of New Toronto, and Rev. Dr. P. L. Graham of Lakeville, N.Y., conducted the services at the home on Prospect St. and at Newmarket cemetery. Miss Lillian Holborne of Sutton sang beautifully at the service at the home.

Panning the Editor
An editor met Sir James Barrie, the famous author of "Peter Pan" and other notable contributions to English literature, at a dinner and was fortunate to be placed next to him at the table.

"Sir James," he said in the course of their conversation, "I suppose some of your plays do better than others. They are not all successes, I imagine."

Barrie leaned toward him confidentially. "No," he said, his eyes twinkling, "some Peter out, and some Pan out."

Supply and Demand
Tourist—When I was here last, there were two windmills. What has become of the other one?

Native—We had to take it down.

Tourist—Why?

Native—There was only enough wind for one.

The following story is about a certain Scotchman who returned to his native land after a thirty-year absence. Preparatory to his leaving America he wrote and asked his brothers to meet him at the station, and upon his arrival at the home town was met by two bearded men whom he had difficulty in recognizing.

"Why the beards?" he asked. "Dinna ye remember, Donald?" replied they. "You took the razor with you."

"The pretty girl sat in the corner of the compartment next to her sweetheart, her little niece on her knee. The train dashed into a tunnel, and suddenly the other passengers heard the little girl exclaim: "Kiss me, too, Auntie Violet."

"Mavis," said Aunt Violet, quickly, "you should say, 'Kiss me twice.' 'Kiss me two' is not good grammar."

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our only son and brother, Leonard Railton, who was killed Aug. 22, 1934. August brings sad memories, Of a loved one gone to rest; He will always be remembered, By those who loved him best. Days of sadness still come o'er us, Tears in silence often flow; Memories keep him ever near us, Though it is three years ago. Ever remembered by Mother, Dad and Beth.

Yorke—In memory of a loving husband and father, Everett T. Yorke, who passed away August 22, 1936.

I have lost my soul's companion, A life linked with my own, And day by day I miss him more As I walk through life alone. Sadly missed by his loving Wife, and Son Claude.

Metherall—In loving memory of our dear daughter, Nellie, who died August 18, 1934.

We miss her here so very much, Her presence oft seems near, But we all hope in Heaven to meet, Where no one says good-bye. Sadly missed by Mother and Dad and family.

Metherall—In loving memory of our dear Nellie, who died August 18, 1934. We know that Jesus took her, Into His mansion above, There to be free from all troubles. Safe in the arms of His love. Sadly missed by Grandma and Grandpa Rose.

Willon—In loving memory of our dear Wife and Mother, Mary Ann Willon, who fell asleep August 22, 1935.

Three speeds on, two years have passed Since death its gloom, its shadows cast Within our home, where all seemed bright, And took from us a shining light. We miss that light, and ever will. Her vacant place there's none can fill. Down here we mourn, but not in vain, For up in Heaven we will meet again. Sadly missed by Husband, Son and Family.

Thrilling True Story
MAKES STARTLING FILM

With Hollywood producers trying to outdo each other when making sensational movie stories, it is refreshing as well as interesting to note that a new 100 per cent talking version of "The Man They Could Not Hang" has recently been produced which, while containing every thrill desired, is yet a highly moral entertainment containing much for every church-goer to ponder over.

This true story of a young lad, arrested and sentenced to death on purely circumstantial evidence, of his constant assertions of innocence, his fervent belief that Heaven would not allow an innocent man to perish, of the failure three times over of the gallows to act, and of the final confession of another, making a story many times as thrilling as the multitude of absurd concoctions sent out by small minded producers, and yet both entertaining and absolutely true.

Now on a world tour, the complete unit including (in person) W. Leonard Howe, formerly with Douglas Fairbanks, Sir J. Forbes Robertson and other stars, who will give a first hand knowledge story of the great case, introducing scenes of the crime and the survivors as they appear today, and will play the Palace theatre, Newmarket for two nights only, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 25 and 26.

"If you are good, Richie, I'll give you this bright new penny." "Haven't you got a dirty old nickel?"

A SONG FROM THE HEART

By Mabel McKee

The rusty old car jolted up the hill, down it, and started up another. The engine sputtered noisy protests to the road so filled with ruts that the driver found it impossible to miss all of them. The lone passenger in the car clenched her hands and tried to keep from crying. Several times she spoke, always asking the same question, "How much farther is it to Heartsease?"

The driver mumbled back his answer, "Not very far now." At first he had tried to talk to Jeanne Berthels. When she had climbed into his car, pointed out at the Junction as a taxicab, he had begun asking questions. Her chilliness, however, had soon frozen him into silence.

With each turn of the wheels Jeanne vowed, "I shall never enter a radio studio again. I shall never sing. No one in this town shall know I even know a note of music. I never—"

The car gave another lurch and stopped dead still. Frantically Jeanne clutched the seat. While she straightened her hat and made her position more secure, the old man climbed out of the car and went to look at the motor.

While he examined it, Jeanne snuggled closer in the great Scotch blanket Gordon had given her as a parting present. The events of the last week passed in a long, dreary procession through her mind. She was again singing in a room hung with heavy crimson curtains, singing a medley of southern songs. Madame had liked particularly, a number of "blue" songs Madame did not like, but which she felt would interest the manager at the station. At the close of her audition the accompanist had said, "Your voice is rich; your notes are perfect."

After that Jeanne and Gordon had chatted happily together while she waited for the manager's verdict. They were planning for a happy future as friends, planning evenings at lectures, concerts, picnics at the lake when the warm days of summer should come. The accompanist's words had made Jeanne sure of a contract.

They had hardly noticed the manager's secretary was in the room until she had spoken a few terse sentences; then both had sat speechless. Right now, the secretary had told them, the program at the studio was so full the manager felt he could not add her to their roster of entertainers. Later, perhaps, he could. The manager would get in touch with her when there was a vacancy.

On the way home, Jeanne had been too heartbroken with disappointment to talk. Gordon, however, had raged. "You're too good for them. The manager knew when he heard you sing you'd be too expensive for them. What they are wanting is cheap music. They can't afford you." Gordon had not known of the other failures, the other stations Jeanne had visited and at which she had sung. He did not know of her songs to the leader of a large choir or the ones she had sung for the manager of the Chautauque Company. He had been in the south covering a national convention for the paper for which he was star reporter when these had occurred.

Jeanne could not tell him about these, nor about how little money she had left, Gordon was too successful to have much use for a failure. Jeanne was sure of that. Later that evening, however, she made her way back to the studio and begged for a little talk with the manager.

After she had told him about her other failures, she tossed a heartbroken question at him. "What's wrong with my voice? Madame says my notes are perfect. But I can't get an engagement. What's wrong?"

The manager's bored look suddenly changed to one of interest. The man leaned forward. "My dear," he said kindly, "the notes you sing are perfect. But there are many notes missing. These are the notes in your heart. Most of our listeners, as you know, are in homes. Evening programs are their favorites. For these they want the kind of music mothers sing to their children in sweet crooning voices with heartbreak, love and laughter in them. You're too remote, too far away from people for that. Pardon me, but I must tell you that your singing is too mechanical, too much of an attempt to sing perfect notes and not to move people's hearts. "Come back when you've learned to sing the hidden notes in your heart as beautifully as you do the others, and I'll offer you a salary which will stagger you."

Jeanne Berthels was now far away from the city, sitting in a car while a gruff old man fussed at a dilapidated engine. She was on her way to the home of a small-town physician to be his secretary and companion for his daughter, who spent her days in a wheel chair. Oh, it was a strange position for a musician, but Jeanne, who needed money so badly, had fairly rushed to get it when she heard of a vacancy through an employment agency.

The motor was running now and they were again jolting down the hilly road. Jeanne was once more murmuring the vow she had made. "Up in this village no one shall know I have a singing voice."

"That's Heartsease up on that hill just beyond the town." The driver was talking again. "It looks old, but it's not. The old doctor has steam heat and a sun parlor and everything nice for his daughter."

Jeanne looked at the little houses on each side of the crooked street down which they drove, the large consolidated school, attended by the children of the workers in the clay plant and the mine, who made this town their home. Beyond a pretty little white church building was the doctor's office. The old-fashioned sign hanging from the veranda announced the place.

Heartsease was a rambling, comfortable building with a sign, which was a counterpart of that at the office, hanging from two posts in the front yard. Evergreen trees around the house and hills back of it added to the beauty of the place. Jeanne liked it more and more as she neared it. Here she would start a new life.

Here she would read the novels Gordon would some day write. Gordon could not come to see her. She had not told him when she said good-by that their friendship was over. Better far never to see Gordon again than to let him know she was a complete failure. Tears sprang to her eyes while she lived over again the parting with Gordon.

Inside the physician's home Jeanne had to forget everything, even Gordon, to greet Dr. Beverly, a slender scholarly man in the early fifties, and his daughter, a young girl of 17. She reached up a beautiful hand to Jeanne. In a silvery voice filled with delight she exclaimed, "Oh, you're young, too, very young. What wonderful evenings we can have together!"

"Don't ever let Miss Fay know if you feel sorry for her," the old housekeeper told Jeanne when she had shown her to her room. "She thinks life a happy adventure."

Their dinner was interrupted by a call for the physician, so the two girls were alone when they re-entered the living room with its great cases of books, its radio, its pretty pictures, its attractive furnishings. To herself Jeanne thought, "What a wonderful father the doctor is! He's done everything to make this home so lovely and perfect his daughter won't miss walking so much."

Aloud she said, "You have the loveliest home I've ever lived in."

Fay was radiant. "That's great! Father says it's perfect, but he likes everything I do. What I've needed since I made over this funny house was some one who didn't want to flatter me to tell me it's okeh." Her blue eyes grew earnest now. "You see it's intended to be a place where Father can relax and be happy."

Jeanne's hands grew tense. This girl, who lived her days in a wheel chair, had planned this house. It had not been furnished for her, as Jeanne had thought.

After that came the busiest days Jeanne had ever known. Her mornings were spent in the physician's office. Here she learned to give first aid to the injured, encouragement to the sick of heart. "We must give them cheerfulness and courage even as we give them pills and powders," Dr. Beverly often told her. "These people have troubles. You and I, who have none, must try to help them with their problems."

Weeks had passed before Jeanne saw the physician depressed. He came into the living room with dragging feet one evening. "Sam Dempsey's dead, Fay," he said. "And those seven children and that sick wife are left to struggle on without him."

Jeanne was the one who coaxed him to the lounge, covered him with a light blanket, and went to the kitchen to bring him hot milk. While she was gone, Fay fussed with the radio, switching it from station to station. "I can't get anything but jazz orchestras," she sighed when Jeanne was in the room again. The doctor disliked jazz orchestras. He liked old-fashioned songs. Now he murmured, "I'd give a fortune if one of them were only singing 'Sun of My Soul' or 'Abide With Me'."

Jeanne clenched her hands until they hurt. Oh, she could not sing now and bring back all the jagged tearing heartaches! She told herself this until she noticed that the physician's face was twitching as though with pain. Rising, she walked to the old-fashioned piano. Softly she touched the keys, and still more softly she began to sing one of his favorite songs, "The Long, Long Trail."

She was not singing perfect notes now. They had been forgotten. She was crooning as she sang, not for beauty, but to bring healing to the man who was suffering from the patient he could not cure, the family he could not hold together.

When the song was ended, the physician was asleep. Fay had left the room to meet the boys of her Americanization class in the big comfortable kitchen, so that her father would not be disturbed. Jeanne joined her there to tell her that her father was resting. "We were listening to your music," said the girl in the wheel chair with a glorious smile. "And Benito wants you to teach him those songs. He wants to come to-morrow evening for his first lesson."

Two dark pleading eyes looked into Jeanne's brown ones. A youth in broken Italian voiced his own pleas. There seemed nothing Jeanne could do but agree to Fay's plans for the next evening.

Jeanne heard the shrill mine whistles in the quiet of the night and sprang from her bed. They told just one fact, an accident at the mine. She dressed and in the hall met the rest of the family, their faces grave and uneasy. "Could you go with me?" Dr. Beverly already had Jeanne's coat. "We'll need all the help we can get if this is a serious accident."

The whistles continued until they were at the mine, around the shaft of which flickered many lights. Jeanne heard with bated breath of the explosion. Forty-seven men were entombed in the mine. The rescue crew was ready to go down.

Through that night Jeanne sang to these women songs they loved although they did not understand the words. She sang until some of them dropped to sleep.

Bulletins came from the rescue crew, but these were not brought to the office until one came which said that the imprisoned men had lapped on the roof of their level to the rescue crew working above that they were alive. Hours later came the word that the men had been reached and the first cage of them was coming up.

The waiting women rushed outside with little cries of joy and bursts of laughter. Jeanne followed them.

Suddenly in the crowd she ran face to face with Gordon Barnes and an array of other newspaper men. She did not realize that he was beside her, so anxious was she to reach the tipple to see if the doctor was safe and not too tired. Gordon was with her, too, when the cage reached the top, when the men were helped from it, when dark-eyed Benito, weary and weak, was helped from the cage.

The Italian searched the crowd near him until his eyes lighted on Jeanne. He waved his weak hands toward her. "I sing to them," he called. "I sing them the songs you teach me. I sing and they quit swearing and listen to Pierre say the prayer."

Even Benito was in the crowd at the little station when Jeanne left the Junction. Like the old doctor and Fay, he said, "You come back soon. We'll always be looking for you."

The entire week had been a hurried one for Jeanne. At first she had refused to see the Manager of the radio station, brought to the little town in the hills by the newspaper stories about her night of song, about Benito's singing to the miners. "I can't go back and sing just to entertain people," she told the doctor. "It's such an idle life. What if I have the missing notes in my heart? They may leave me when I'm away from the people who brought them."

"They will never leave," the physician returned. "The life isn't idle. You'll be singing to millions, your heart crying out messages in those songs, messages that will make the sorrowful smile, that will even lead the unbelieving to God."

On the dirty little accommodation train she waved and waved as it steamed and puffed station became a speck; then she wiped away a few tears and tried to smile. After a time she was the old eager Jeanne again. The conductor had brought her a telegram.

"Leave the train at Brocton," it read. "I'm motoring there to meet you. Stop the interview. I want isn't for my paper, but for Gordon Barnes alone—Gordon."

GRAIN CONTEST PROVES CLOSE

Following is the score of the several contestants in the standing field crop competition conducted by Scott Agricultural Society. The crop was O.A.C. 21 barley.

Don. C. St. John, 80; Philip Rynard, 88½; Thomas Sellers, 88; Bert Blackburn, 87½; G. N. Graham, 87; W. J. Rynard, 84½; Harvey Shier, 84; James A. Smith, 80½; Bruce Brand, 80; Lorne Bagshaw, 79½; Milburn Meek, 79; Wm. Harrison, 78½.

The first eight are prize-winners. It will be noted how high the score is and how close the contestants. Anyone getting in the prize money had to have a very choice crop.

LOSES MEMORY OF CAR CRASH

Charged with having liquor in an illegal place, Alfred Cowling pled guilty to consuming in Newmarket police court on Tuesday and was fined $10 and costs.

A. Marritt was also charged with having liquor in an illegal place, in his car at Musselman's Lake. He pleaded guilty to consuming.

"I was not in the car at the time," he stated. "I did not know the liquor was there."

Evidence was given to the effect that both liquor and glasses had been in the car.

"I didn't know about the glasses either," he stated. "I find it hard to believe." Magistrate L. J. C. Bull stated, imposing a fine of $100 and costs or three months in jail. The accused asked for a remand.

Constable Hodgins stated that he had followed a car travelling at 70 miles an hour and had taken the license number, J. Elliott of Thornhill paid $15 and costs for speeding in consequence. Howard Walker also paid a fine for speeding.

A wage claim for $24.60 against Andrew Green, farmer, was dismissed when the complainant admitted that after hiring for seven months, he had left his employer in the busy season to take a job with more pay.

Albert Diehart of Barrie appeared on a reckless driving charge. Constable Ferguson testified that the driver had crashed into a car driven by Harry Snider of Detroit, causing $150 damage to Snider's car and sending Mrs. Snider to the hospital. Diehart's car was beyond repair, the constable said.

Mr. Diehart, still bearing signs of injuries received in the collision, took the stand.

"I haven't the faintest recollection of what happened," he said. "I was driving north on Yonge Street and had passed Newmarket. I went over the hill and I saw a clear road ahead. The next thing I knew, I was in the hospital."

Constable Ferguson recommended that the driver's permit be cancelled until a physical examination had been passed. The magistrate ordered the permit cancelled until Diehart could give proof of his ability to drive.

A charge against James Bowdler for speeding was dismissed because the summons had not been served within the time limit.

D. J. Davidson paid a fine of $10 and costs for failure to grade eggs purchased by him. The firm of Geo. H. Davies was charged with carrying a load in excess of that for which its permit was issued. The charge was dismissed when it was learned that the invoice presented by the driver as being descriptive of his load, really was an invoice for a consignment which was carried away on two trucks.

Thos. Proctor paid a fine of $10 and costs for permitting people to ride on the running boards of his car near Wilketts Lake. Alfred Neil paid $5 and costs for speeding on the lake shore road.

FIRST SCHOOL BELL IS RUNG

Rastus and his wife, driving to

TREASURE HUNT

—By Barbara Webb

SYNOPSIS

Belinda Louise (Lindy Lou) Hillcrest received a letter in New York, telling her of treasure hidden at her former home, Twin-oaks, in the South. She confided the news to handsome Anton Homans, a salesman for the company where Lindy Lou worked. He laughed at it and forbade her going to search for the treasure. He asked Lindy Lou to marry him and the day after they became engaged left on a long sales trip. Now Lindy Lou is at Twin-oaks. On her arrival there she was recognized by Lee Beverly, a former friend, who insisted on sending over his cook, Ellen Marie, when he found Lindy Lou determined to spend the night at Twin-oaks. The two women were badly frightened during the night by various noises and Ellen Marie declares she will not stay another night. Lee comes in the morning and shows Lindy Lou where some one has been digging near the old pigsty—a spot marked on Lindy Lou's map of directions for finding the treasure.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Lee confronted by a barrier Lindy Lou sat in the warm morning sun, waiting for Lee to return. She had got all over her fright now and was in a fever of impatience to begin her search. But she would have to wait until Lee had gone, for she meant to have no witness of her wanderings over the place. She took the map out of the pocket of her shirt and studied it again. The old pigsty was plainly marked and from it a line had been drawn to the elm tree. Lindy Lou set her lips. It surely looked as though someone else had a copy of the map, though, of course, it might be only chance that had led the intruder to search in these two places.

She looked up presently to see Lee driving up to the gate. With him was an old colored man with a white poll of hair. Lee strode up the walk.

"I brought Mose over to cut this long grass down in the yard for you, Lindy Lou. I've told him to work around here today, but he won't bother you any. He's got a shovel and a pick, too, in case you find some spot you want dug up. He won't ask any questions, just do what you tell him to. Now don't object, Lindy Lou. Mose is going to stay. I've got to ride over to Dalton to a horse sale this afternoon and I can't be around myself."

Lindy Lou thanked him stiffly. She would far rather have been left here alone, but she could hardly refuse Lee's arrangement. He sat on the step by her side and went on: "Then about to-night. You'll have to go to Mrs. Jackson's, Lindy Lou. I'll stop and speak to her about it as I ride through the village. The postman drives past here about 4 and I'll tell him to pick you up and take you into town. I'll tell them both you're down here about the old place and about some antiques you hope to find in it, and you stick to the same story. That will leave you free to poke around out here as much as you like."

Lindy Lou admitted the wisdom of this plan, but wished she had thought of it herself. Lee waited for her to speak. "All right, I'll do that, I guess, since there doesn't seem to be anything else for me to do. But, Lee, what do you think about that digging that's been done at Twin-oaks?"

Lee considered. "I think someone else knows old Pearl's story and wants to beat you to the treasure, Lindy Lou."

"But who could it be?"

"You'd know more about that than I would," Lee told her. "I think old Pearl must have told someone else before she died, someone in the neighborhood—that's what I think."

"I doubt it. It would have been all over the place by this time, and I hadn't heard a word of it before you told me. Then, too, I know every man, woman and child, black and white, around here, and there hasn't been any one on the place at all lately."

"Third point, Pearl died more than two weeks ago—why should any one have waited this long to start searching? No, Lindy Lou, I think that while your map was lost in your desk, some one made a copy of it, back in New York."

Lindy Lou shook her head. "No, Lee, I don't think so. The only person who saw the map, I'm sure, is some one—some one I absolutely can trust."

"Who was it, Lindy Lou? You might as well tell me; no use in having any secrets between us."

Lindy Lou grew red. "It's a man—a man in the office, Lee. I'm—in fact, I'm engaged to marry him."

"What? And he let you come down here alone? Lee's astonishment had in it a note that puzzled Lindy Lou.

"Anton, that's his name; Anton Homans, he doesn't know I'm here, Lee."

thing about my coming down here, he forbade my coming at all."

"Then why did you come, Lindy Lou?"

"Well," Lindy Lou dug her toe in the dust, "you see we can't be married for a long time, maybe more than a year, because we haven't enough money. And—and I thought if I could find the treasure we wouldn't have to wait so long. Anton's different from you, Lee; he's never had much of a home, and he thinks nice clothes and a fine car and things like that are important. That is, he did until we became engaged, but now he's all changed."

"I see," said Lee. But he didn't see. He didn't see at all how any man with a claim to Lindy Lou's heart could bear to have her away from him for a minute. And as badly frightened during the night by various noises and Ellen Marie declares she will not stay another night. Lee comes in the morning and shows Lindy Lou where some one has been digging near the old pigsty—a spot marked on Lindy Lou's map of directions for finding the treasure.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN
Lee confronted by a barrier Lindy Lou sat in the warm morning sun, waiting for Lee to return. She had got all over her fright now and was in a fever of impatience to begin her search. But she would have to wait until Lee had gone, for she meant to have no witness of her wanderings over the place. She took the map out of the pocket of her shirt and studied it again. The old pigsty was plainly marked and from it a line had been drawn to the elm tree. Lindy Lou set her lips. It surely looked as though someone else had a copy of the map, though, of course, it might be only chance that had led the intruder to search in these two places.

She looked up presently to see Lee driving up to the gate. With him was an old colored man with a white poll of hair. Lee strode up the walk.

"I brought Mose over to cut this long grass down in the yard for you, Lindy Lou. I've told him to work around here today, but he won't bother you any. He's got a shovel and a pick, too, in case you find some spot you want dug up. He won't ask any questions, just do what you tell him to. Now don't object, Lindy Lou. Mose is going to stay. I've got to ride over to Dalton to a horse sale this afternoon and I can't be around myself."

Lindy Lou thanked him stiffly. She would far rather have been left here alone, but she could hardly refuse Lee's arrangement. He sat on the step by her side and went on: "Then about to-night. You'll have to go to Mrs. Jackson's, Lindy Lou. I'll stop and speak to her about it as I ride through the village. The postman drives past here about 4 and I'll tell him to pick you up and take you into town. I'll tell them both you're down here about the old place and about some antiques you hope to find in it, and you stick to the same story. That will leave you free to poke around out here as much as you like."

Lindy Lou admitted the wisdom of this plan, but wished she had thought of it herself. Lee waited for her to speak. "All right, I'll do that, I guess, since there doesn't seem to be anything else for me to do. But, Lee, what do you think about that digging that's been done at Twin-oaks?"

Lee considered. "I think someone else knows old Pearl's story and wants to beat you to the treasure, Lindy Lou."

"But who could it be?"

"You'd know more about that than I would," Lee told her. "I think old Pearl must have told someone else before she died, someone in the neighborhood—that's what I think."

"I doubt it. It would have been all over the place by this time, and I hadn't heard a word of it before you told me. Then, too, I know every man, woman and child, black and white, around here, and there hasn't been any one on the place at all lately."

"Third point, Pearl died more than two weeks ago—why should any one have waited this long to start searching? No, Lindy Lou, I think that while your map was lost in your desk, some one made a copy of it, back in New York."

Lindy Lou shook herself. "I've got work to do," she thought, "and I'd better get at it if I'm to leave here around 4 this afternoon."

Lindy Lou went back through the house to the kitchen. She spread her map on a low shelf and with a pencil began marking directions for herself. She looked at the sun and turned the side of the map marked east in that direction. Seen thus, the line that ran to the pigsty started from the kitchen door. With this as a guide Lindy Lou discovered a sort of winding path through the map that ran roughly from kitchen door to pigsty; from pigsty to a clump of elm trees; from the elm trees to the far corner of the farm where its land joined the Beech property, Lee's farm; from there in a wandering manner back to the house at Twin-oaks, and then seemed to vanish in her own front door.

There were other paths indicated, too, but this seemed to be the most connected one. There were some puzzling erasures, too. Lindy Lou could see the marks on the paper left when the eraser had been used.

"It just doesn't make sense," thought Lindy Lou, despondingly. "And there are four different crosses on the map, too; one in the house, one over there in a corner that couldn't possibly be on our place, even if this map is drawn to any kind of scale; one near the elm tree, and one in the general direction of the barn."

Lindy Lou knew something about plans. She had looked over her father's shoulder when he was working at blueprints and she wished suddenly that she had immediately gone to him with the whole thing when the letter arrived.

"If it hadn't been for Anton that day I probably would have, but it's no use crying over that spilled milk. The thing for me to do is to start right out and follow the most connected looking lines. Then each place I eliminate brings the treasure that much closer. Just a little system; that's all I need."

She went back to the front porch. Mose was still working away at the long grass and did not seem to see her. Cautiously (for she did not want him to know, if possible) she removed the pickaxe from where Lee had stood it against the porch. Then she scuttled off and went straight back to the pigsty, where she and Lee had stood that morning earlier.

Lindy Lou walked all around the hole that some one else had dug. Some one else might have found the treasure, but Lindy Lou had a conviction they hadn't. "If they had," she reasoned, "they'd never bothered about Ellen Marie and me last night."

She took out her map and studied it again. "I believe it's a little more to the right than this place. Whoever dug here dug right in the middle of what used to be the place where the pigs were kept. And pigs roared around a lot, so if the treasure had been buried here, it's ten to one the pigs themselves would have dug it up sometime. I'm going to try all four corners of where the pen used to be."

She walked all around and, after much labor, located the boundaries of the pigsty fence. Then she drove into each of the four angles a small stick and felt very proud of herself.

"Now for the digging," said Lindy Lou aloud. And she lifted the pickaxe and set to work.

But poor Lindy Lou had forgotten how hard wielding a pickaxe can be. By the end of ten minutes her hands were blistered, her back ached and the sweat poured down her face. Also she had dug one hole less than a foot deep about as big around, a discouraging total, after all that work and physical agony.

"I'll have to go back and get Mose," Lindy Lou decided. "Lee said he would do anything I asked him to."

So she went back to the house where by this time Mose had made the front yard look quite respectable.

"Looks mighty nice now, Mose," Lindy Lou told him. "But instead of going on with that right now, I've got a little job I'd like you to do for me, over behind the barns."

"All right, Missy," Mose laid down his scythe and followed her, his back bent from years of toil, his patient face and trusting, his unwarred hands quite willing to do whatever was asked of him.

Lindy Lou showed him the four stakes. "I want you to dig a good sized hole at each of these four places. Mose, just where the corners of the old fence used to be."

"Yes, Missy. You-all aimin' to raise pigs again, I reckon."

Lindy Lou made an effort and managed to keep her face straight. "Well, I don't know, Mose. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, I just loved you-all was gonna put this fence back again. Mighty good place for pigs. I remember when your gan-puppy kep' 'em here, fine big ones. Used to make all they own bacon, here at Twin-oaks. Many's the time I've helped in the smoke house, home curing time."

"Where was the smokehouse?" Lindy Lou asked.

Mose pointed to one of the smaller buildings near the barn. "Right over there, Missy. All locked up now, but I reckon it still smells like hickory wood and brown sugar."

Lindy Lou looked at her map while Mose started to dig. The smokehouse wasn't marked but Lindy Lou decided that some time she would look there just the same. If every marked place failed then she would begin canvassing all the unmarked possibilities. For with every hour that Lindy Lou became more convinced that a fortune was hidden somewhere on the farm.

Mose toiled on, Lindy Lou watched him for a while, then feeling sure he would call her if his pick struck a box or bag, she went over in the elm. Grass was tramped down all around the trees, and a pile of earth showed a hole had recently been dug there.

Hope

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Waters and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Waters of Toledo were spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. A. Dike last week.

Mr. Selby Evans and Mr. Harry Demmon of Brampton were calling on Mr. M. L. Pegg on Sunday.

Mrs. Church of Richmond Hill was visiting her daughter, Mrs. Glen Micks, on Sunday.

Mrs. Jacobs of St. Catharines has been spending a few days with her mother, Mrs. Arnold.

Misses Elsie and Hannah Goode, Mrs. Shields and Mr. Bruce Shields called on Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Pegg on Sunday.

Mrs. Wyn. Crouch, Jr., of Poplar Bank visited Mrs. J. Davis on Saturday.

AURORA BEGAN INDIAN BOYS' SCHOOL

Miss Jennette Mary Sutherland died at the York County Hospital and was buried in the Anglican cemetery at Oakridges on Monday. The service was held in the church, conducted by Rev. P. R. Soanes, assisted by Rev. Mr. Boyd, Aurora.

Miss Sutherland was in her 83rd year. Coming to Canada 31 years ago, she started the Indian Boys' School at Chapleau, Ont. There as nurse—matron—missionary, she remained seven years.

In Aurora she had a nursing home and tea room. Her only surviving relative in Canada is Mrs. Walter Moore.

Mrs. Henry Foy has been visiting her sister at Smiths Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Reynolds and family of St. Catharines have been visiting Mrs. Reynolds' sister, Mrs. Hugh Bowman, here.

Miss Jean Malloy, a bride-to-be of this month, is having a trousseau tea on Thursday, this week. Miss Jean Powell was hostess at a cup and saucer shower on Tuesday evening, and a miscellaneous shower was given by Miss Ella Green, R.N., on Thursday evening of last week in Jean's honor. She was presented with a silver tea service by the staff at Swansea, where she had been teaching.

Mr. and Mrs. Graham Teasdale and baby of Buffalo spent this weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Harry Teasdale.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fleury and family of Toronto spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Fleury.

Miss Jean Fry is spending a week at Sturgeon Point.

Mrs. E. J. Johnson is visiting in Winnipeg.

Mrs. C. R. Boulding and family have returned from a short stay in Welland.

Mrs. J. Elliott, her daughter, and Mrs. J. Stephenson are leaving on Saturday for Fort William.

Miss Alma Baker of Stouffville was guest soloist at the United church on Sunday morning. Donald Galbraith sang at the Presbyterian church.

Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Brooks, and Bobby, left on Saturday for Detroit.

Several from Aurora went with the Black Knights to Oshawa on Saturday.

Aurora firemen, with their families, went to Musselman's Lake on Saturday for a picnic. An excellent time is reported.

HOLLAND LANDING VISITORS HELP IN RE-OPENING

you glance up and there they are, purple and shining in the sun, appearing without any notice. Even a sunset over the Pacific can't equal the picture created by the sun sinking behind that row of rocky peaks.

Our adventure wasn't far away, for before long we were right in the heart of the Rockies, and looking at them from the top. Of all the national parks in Canada, none is more deserving or receives less praise than Waterton, tucked away in the south-western corner of Alberta. Right next door and across the border line is Glacier National Park, and these two mountain paradises form together what is known as the International Peace Park. It was here, then, that we were initiated into the order of mountaineers, the test being the ascent of an 8,600 foot mountain.

Our host so filled us with all sorts of tales of the hardships we would be forced to endure, that when the actual climb came we felt like heroes and martyrs for even attempting such a thing.

It was a real experience, though, to stand on that peak when we did get there and feel that all the world was at our feet. It even grows on the people who live there; to leave not a single mountain unclimbed is the desire of practically every one of those Canadian Alpinists.

We didn't see the last of the mountains for a good long time, for ranges run the length of British Columbia plenty, and to reach the coast we had to go over at least six or seven summits. Through the Crow's Nest to Cranbrook, Grand Forks and Trail, where we took time to see the largest smelter in the world, and up the Kootenay to Nelson and the Doukbor country we journeyed.

We slept 'neath the shadow of vigilant guards pacing to and fro with loaded guns, waiting for the raiding "Sons of Freedom." And then, nestled in the mountain foot-hills, we found Phoenix.

This river road brought us right to our destination, Vancouver and the Pacific. But Vancouver is a story in itself; in truth you could write a book about it. It is Phoenix is a ghost town. During the war there was a boom in silver and gold and the population sprang rapidly to 14,000. The workings spread and houses started to come in. Then the market caved in and the town died a speedy death. Up till last September, when they started working one of the old shafts again, there were only three people still living there.

One old man told us in glowing tones of the life that once was. It was he who had made the first "strike" that brought on the feverish and holocaust days of the "rush." How different from Trail or the new towns of Ontario's north.

Leaving the mountains behind for a short while, we plodded up the famed fruit-growing Okanagan Valley. Out of a wilderness of mountain forest, enterprising fruit-growers have made a paradise, a thriving land of cherries, apricots, melons, peaches, apples, or practically any fruit you could name.

We are proud of our orchards of a couple of acres, but you should stand on a mountain side and look down on the countless rows of trees, all flourishing and producing—producing fruit that is giving Canada a world-wide reputation.

The trail of the caribou in days of not so long ago is now a fine highway that leads down the canyon of the Thompson and Fraser Rivers to the sea, our goal and theirs. We followed for many a mile the tortuous turns about the precipitous ledges of the gorge, marvelling all the while at the skill of the engineer in following so closely that highway of nature—the only route known to the early explorer—the river.

The scenery was magnificent, almost exhausting, but the driver who took time to look at anything again. We stopped there occasionally to drink in the views that can only be described as "British Columbian."

Snowball

The W.A. of the United church held their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. H. Haines on Wednesday of last week with a large attendance.

Mrs. McCann of Los Angeles, is holidaying with her niece, Mrs. Frank Williams.

Mr. Norman Teasdale, who has been on the sick list, is greatly improved.

Mr. Bert Taylor, who suffered head injuries while threshing, is recovering very nicely.

Mr. T. H. Shropshire spent Sunday with Mr. Harry Mills.

The Women's Institute will hold their August meeting at the home of Mrs. Ernest Copson next Wednesday. The roll call will be answered by naming a Canadian industry and bringing along a label of the product if possible. A speaker on agriculture is expected. Current events will be given by Miss Ella Copson. There will be community singing. The hostesses are Mesdames C. Copson, Mills, Teasdale, Misses E. Copson and H. Webb.

Miss Ruth Webb has returned from an extended trip to the eastern coast.

Bethel

The monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid and Women's Missionary Society of the Bethel congregation met on August 12 and was given a real welcome at the home of Mrs. Duke Horner.

Although some inconveniences, such as showers in the early afternoon and no less than three different threshing outfits at work within a radius of three miles, kept some at home there were between 35 and 40 present. The devotional part was taken by the president, Mrs. T. W. Huntley.

Mrs. Nelson accompanied the hymns on the piano, which, with the assistance of a few male voices, helped very much. The scripture lesson was chosen and read by Miss Winnie Willoughby and there were prayers by different members.

The devotional part was followed by a short program. A short reading on "Conservation" by the secretary, Mrs. Leslie Stephens, being very much to the point.

Mrs. L. Fairburn gave a selection, "Who is My Neighbor?" and Mrs. Wm. Winch read parts of letters from foreign missionaries.

A very interesting paper was given by Miss Myrtle Stiles on "Personality." A verse of The Old Rugged Cross was sung with much feeling, preceding an interesting talk by the pastor, Mr. Butler, on his missionary work in Newfoundland, where his widowed mother still lives, and where his father spent many years in the ministry. This part of the afternoon closed with prayer.

6th Con., N. G.

The recent showers which followed the intense heat wave helped to place both man and beast in better working condition.

Some here attended the Ladies' Aid at Mrs. Horner's last Thursday. The meeting was led by the president, Mrs. Chesley Cryderman, who received reports of the last July gathering, which amounted to $32. The annual anniversary of the church, which was built in 1874, is being left with a committee to arrange for a Sabbath in September. A good congregation attended Bethel on Sunday morning.

Visitors included Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Hart and Miss Hart of Lindsay. Mrs. Hibbard and children from near St. Lutha, with Mrs. John Shaw; Muriel and Margo, two little fresh air children from Toronto with Mrs. Douglas Cooper; Miss Vera Fairbairn and Miss Myrtle Stiles, both enjoying their busy holiday with home friends.

Mr. and Mrs. John Morton and Betty attended the L.A., bringing their guests with them, meeting and enjoying the fellowship of old friends.

Maple Hill

A mild epidemic of stomach flu has been going around. It is hoped it will soon be over.

Mrs. Bert Coffin is laid up with a severe attack of sciatica.

Miss Pearl Scott of Toronto is visiting her cousin, Mrs. D. Love.

Mr. Ed. Scott and family of Toronto were visiting his sister, Mrs. Love, last Sunday.

Miss Dorothy Wright was in Toronto last week, visiting her cousin, Miss Phyllis Marritt.

Mr. M. Miller of Toronto supplied last week for Mr. Armstrong, who was preaching in his own home church at Watford.

Mr. Armstrong will be back next Sunday with services at the usual hours. Sunday-school is at 10:45 a.m. The prayer meeting will be at 7 p.m. and the evangelistic service at 7:30 p.m. A welcome is extended to those who enjoy the old-fashioned gospel and good congregational singing.

Increase Of Wood Lots Is Basis Of King Plan

been working up the north branch of the Humber. This matter of water temperatures may prove very important in convincing people of the need of wood lots along the streams.

"My own objective is to try to have every stream in King township bushed for two or 300 feet on either side."

"What other work is being done?" "K. M. Mayall, who is a graduate forester, is making a study of every individual farm in King township to determine the wood lot on it now, the condition of the wood lot, the effect of grazing (which is detrimental, preventing growth of young bush), the amount of land that is waste from an agricultural point of view and might better be forest, and what steps might be taken to change existing conditions."

"He will recommend where the wood lots should be established and what type of trees ought to be planted."

"We have two other men on wild life, studying particularly the bird population, the pheasant, grouse, ducks and birds of interest to the hunter. From now on, one man will be on the animal population, from mice to marten (if any), deer, beaver, whatever he runs into."

"At the end of the year we will have a complete picture of the water, wood and wild life."

"Next will come the recommendations. We will appeal to the landowners to help us, particularly to wealthy men owning large tracts. We will bring the township council in as much as possible."

"Finally, we will ask the provincial and federal governments to undertake part of the work as a relief measure, putting men to work in the interests of the township."

"If our plan works out, we will give it publicity in the hope that other townships throughout the province and dominion, will be able to use our original survey in extending this work."

Discussing water conservation further, Prof. Harkness said that at Schomberg there is no water in the stream in the summer time, and there is not a sufficient supply of water for fire-fighting purposes. He did not think a dam there, without other dams at Lloydstown and Bell's Lake, was feasible and safe.

"I've used to be a dam at Schomberg, two at Lloydstown and a big one at Bell's lake, which is now about 30 acres in extent whereas it used to be 50 acres. The mills, which had the dams, became less busy, and less concerned about the dams, and they were washed out. I think it would be a worth-while undertaking for the federal government to build a big dam at Bell's Lake, and low dams at Lloydstown and Schomberg."

"Is there, in normal years, any serious shortage of water on King township farms?" "In the first place, I doubt if there is a 'normal' year. There is a keen water problem. Take last year. There was a bad shortage of water. Starting with 1929 and 1930, the depression aggravated the cutting of wood. With the increased cutting of wood, which has gone on all over this part of Ontario, has gone an increase in drought. If droughts go in cycles, we ought to be in for another period of damp years until about 1943, when we should have a dry year again."

"Drought in Ontario is going to be very much worse. In the high area, from Guelph to Georgian Bay, with the drainage of the Luther and surrounding swamps, the wells are going dry, and the provincial department of health is quite exercised about the situation."

"It sounds unbelievable, but that area is actually approaching desert conditions."

"But returning to King township, we feel that there is an opportunity in the Humber and Schomberg rivers for a government demonstration on flood control, through the restoration of swamps and forests and through a series of small dams from the headwaters."

An incidental but interesting remark, made by Prof. Harkness in discussing trout streams, was that in order to put trout in certain streams where they used to be it would be necessary to lower the temperature of these streams through planting woods along their banks.

"There are now three trout streams in King township," Prof. Harkness said.

GOOD ARE BAD SAYS MINISTER

"At the very moment a man or woman begins to feel good, then he or she becomes bad," was the indictment of Rev. J. C. Torrance of St. Stephen's United church, Toronto, at the union services at the Christian - Congregational church on Sunday morning.

Mr. Torrance took both services on Sunday. Mrs. W. B. Epworth sang a beautiful solo in the morning. "The Lord Is My Shepherd."

Speaking on "unconscious influence," Mr. Torrance, in the morning, took as illustrations of "deliberate influence" sermons, political addresses, editorials.

"When the politician in the next month or two delivers emotional addresses, saying that he and his party are saviours of democracy, as he inevitably does, that is deliberate influence," said Mr. Torrance.

He spoke of the unconscious influence of a handshake. "You know that handshake when you feel you have an overripe banana in your hand," he said. "Your stance, how you carry yourself when you walk down the street, influences people. Some faces, not naturally attractive, have something in them that creates an influence."

Mr. Torrance told a story of a young English workman who used to spend his Saturday afternoons at a tavern across the fields from his home. One winter day he was walking in the snow across to the tavern, when he heard a voice behind him. He looked around to see his small son, stretching his legs to put his feet in his father's tracks in the snow. "It's all right, daddy. I'm following right in your footsteps," the boy called out. "Mr. Torrance related. "The young man turned back. He could not let the child follow him into that hell."

"A man is more severely tested in his own home than anywhere else," Mr. Torrance said. "It is not how he behaves in the office, or the factory, or in public, but how he behaves at home that is most important."

The Score

Jones' wife had been unusually silent during the concert, but it was obvious something was puzzling her.

"By the way," she said, when a piece came to an end, "what's that book the conductor keeps looking at?"

"That's the score of the overture," he replied.

"Oh," she exclaimed, "who's winning?"

Large Pens

Dad and Mum were spending a few days in London. One evening they dined at an expensive restaurant. As soon as they were seated, a large tray of olives was placed on the table.

Dad eyed them seriously for a few minutes, then beckoned to the waiter.

"I don't want to give you any trouble," he said, "but I'd like to see the pods those green pens grew in."

A party of tourists were being shown over the cathedral by a guide.

"Behind the altar," he told them, "lies Richard the Second. In the churchyard outside lies Mary Queen of Scots; also Henry the Eighth. And who," he demanded, halting above an unmarked flagstone, "who do you think is a lying 'ero'?"

"Well," answered a near-by tourist, "I don't know for sure, but I have my suspicions."

MOUNT ALBERT HOLD ANNUAL FLOWER SHOW

The annual flower show of the Horticultural Society will be held on Thursday, August 26. Mr. H. M. Rolph of Markham will be the judge and there will be a lunch served in the afternoon. All interested are asked to have exhibits in by 10.30 p.m. Wednesday and to try to make the show a success.

The Cheerio class of the United Sunday-school held a picnic on Saturday afternoon at Port Bolster, where they had a very nice afternoon.

The Women's Association of the United church, went to Goodwood on Wednesday and spent a very delightful afternoon with the ladies of that church at the home of Mrs. E. Morgeson.

The August meeting of the Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. S. Cupples on Thursday. The president, Mrs. H. Price, was in the chair. They had expected to entertain another Institute, who were to put on the program, but they were unable to come. Miss Leek gave a fine paper on the floral emblems of different countries and Miss Marie Draper and her friend, Miss Botwright, another music-teacher, gave a splendid program of vocal and piano solos and duets, which was a rare treat and enjoyed by all. A social half hour was spent at the close of the meeting.

SUTTON BOX LACROSSE BRINGS CROWD

Over 250 witnessed the junior box lacrosse game at Sutton arena on Monday night when Brooklin defeated the inexperienced Sutton crew by a 9-4 score.

The visitors had a decided edge in the first two periods when they scored eight of their counters, but encountered more opposition from the Lake Simcoe lads in the latter part of the game, when they tallied on four occasions compared to the one goal scored by the Brooklin team.

The game, which is drawing a good number, seems to be increasing in popularity in this district, there being between 250 and 300 in attendance.

Snowden, as rover, played well for the Sutton team.

HOME IMPROVEMENT PLAN

(This column is sponsored by the Newmarket Home Improvement Plan committee. Mayor Dr. S. J. Boyd, honorary chairman. T. F. Doyle, chairman. M. H. Goslett, secretary.)

The housewife who wants her living room to radiate hospitality while it maintains an air of dignity may well choose paneled walls as a background for the furnishings. A room that has become tiresome will take on new life with paneled walls.

One housewife decided on this means of bringing the interior of her house up to modern fashion. She did not feel that the expense of making structural changes to the house was justified, so concentrated her efforts on the rooms in which the family spent most of its time.

The wall panels used were in an interesting design. The wood was not of a uniform size and the irregularity kept the room from too formal an atmosphere. Over the mantel small squares of the paneled formed a design, obviating the necessity of any wall decoration.

Chinese tiles were used in the fireplace, striking a note of color against the sombre background of the wood. The floor was refinished, and leaded windows replaced the regulation ones which had formerly graced the room.

When the transformation of the room had been completed the owner had gay chintz covers made for the furniture and matching drapes hung. The entire character of the room was changed and the family had an individual room which stood out from others of the neighborhood.

Every bathroom cannot have tiled or waterproof walls. In modernizing a home the owner does not always feel justified in spending the necessary amount for this type of room. If so, other wall coverings may be used successfully.

Wainscoting of oil cloth or linoleum is a good substitute for tiling. It is easy to apply and may be used to obtain a variety of colorful effects. This washable material makes the problem of keeping walls clean a simple one. Junior's fingerprints may be eradicated by a mere flick of a damp cloth. Linoleum or other composition flooring may be used in place of a tile floor.

An excellent dressing table may be obtained by building a shelf across the wall in front of a window. This may be painted to conform with the other decorations of the room, a glass top may be made or it may be draped in the fashion of a boudoir table. A standing mirror placed directly in the window is a distinct aid to make-up.

Through the home improvement plan of the dominion government, credit-worthy homeowners may obtain funds from any Canadian bank with which to modernize the interior of their homes.

"Why is the government giving army recruits a special diet?"
"To make them fit and strong."
"Why?"
"To fight somebody, I suppose."
"Why weren't they fit and strong before?"
"Because they didn't have enough to eat when they were children."
"Why didn't the government give them a special diet then?"
"Because nobody realized they would be wanted as soldiers."
"Does the government only feed people up when they've got to fight somebody?"
"Obviously."
"If they had been given a special diet when they were children would they be fit and strong now?"
"Yes, and half as big again. There would also be enough recruits to fill the army twice over."
"Why?"
"Because all those rejected as unfit would be fit."
"Well, if they fed all the children now they would have plenty of soldiers when they grew up, wouldn't they?"
"Yes."
"Well, why don't they do it?"
"Because that would be waste of money."
"You can't expect the government to feed children who may not be wanted as soldiers."
"Why?"
"If I think it's time you went to bed."—From Sunday Express (London).

POTTAGEVILLE IMPROVEMENT SEEN IN CROP

The farmers are busy cutting oats. Many fields are cut and shocked and many believe they have a heavy crop, such a contrast from last year. Corn also is making great headway. Large quantities of early potatoes are being shipped. The market gardeners around this district have good crops.

Dr. and Mrs. Burt Gurrans left for a cruise to Muskoka lakes on Tuesday.

Mrs. J. A. Funnell and Dorreen are spending two weeks in Toronto with the former's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Taylor and son Billie, of Toronto, are camping in Pottageville.

Mr. Ed. O'Brien and his sister, Mrs. E. Payne, and son Laurie, have returned to the city after a two-week stay.

THE UNKNOWN
visitors to a one-run lead.

Richmond Hill got away again in the seventh, however, when Brown came home on Bennett's three-bagger. Mabley, helped by an overthrow, counted another and was followed by J. Crean, who came in on a fine hit by Saul.

In the last half of the last inning, Eves walked to first and clambered along the baselines to score the Red's fourth run. Chuck VanZant went out at first and Giles went out on a fly to left field. Brammer and Selby got safely on bases and when Gibney came to bat again, the crowd yelled for another homer, which would have evened the score. But even Gibney couldn't place them two in a row and a short hit resulted in a put-out at first base to retire the side.

Looking over the series, it would appear that wet ground is bad medicine for the Reds. In the first two games they took wins by 13-1 and 3-1 margins. These two games were not allowed by the executive, however, despite a signed agreement between the two teams that they were to form part of the series.

The 9-6 defeat handed the Reds by Richmond Hill was disallowed and the three-out-of-five series was changed by the group executive to a two-out-of-three play-down. Richmond Hill won the next two games, 5-3 and 7-4. On the total of the five games played the Reds took 29 runs to the Hill's 23, but earned three wins to the Red's two.

Motorist Hint
And then there was the sweet young thing taking the examination for a driver's license, who was asked: "If your brakes suddenly failed to work while you were going down hill, what would you do?"

She hesitated only a moment, then smiled brightly and answered: "Why, that's easy; I'd just jump out and put a big stone under the wheel."

Traveller: Can I get anything to eat in this dump?
Negro Waiter: Yes, sah, you kin.

Traveller: Such as what?
Negro Waiter: Such as it is, sah.
